

Alexandria Gazette

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 9, 1879.

NAPOLEON V. THAT MAY BE.—The Princess Mathilde, sister of Prince Napoleon, shares to the full one strong opinion of her party—she has no faith in her brother, but on the other hand, she has all faith in her brother's son.—Prince Victor, a boy of seventeen, is in her eyes, the ideal candidate, a far better one than poor Prince Louis, who she, in common with many other ladies of her age, thought a little too good to live. Victor is a true Napoleon in looks, in character and in certain fiery impetuosity of temper which marks all the pure blooded of the race. Since the virtual separation of their father and mother, the aunt has looked after both boys. They live with their tutor on the other side of Paris, near the Collège Chrétien, where they attend, but they pass most of their time with the Princess Mathilde. When they are not at the Rue de la Casse, they are at the Rue de la Barre. The Princess is the more attached to Victor because she has no boy of her own.

She is wont to express a delighted apprehension of his spirit, and to implore mild M. Barchet, his tutor, to keep an eye on him day and night. Down to the beginning of the week this was no more than an aunt's care for a pet of a nephew; now it is the concern of a princess for a possible heir to a throne. Beyond the immediate entourage of the Princess absolutely nothing was known of this lad; and it is still not too late in the day to tell all whom it may concern that he is rather tall, handsome, straight as a dart, dark in hair, cheek and eye, and in temper and temperament a true Cypriote. He is his mother's son.

He has her full lips, but the Napoleonic alliance has saved him from having the nose of the House of Savoy. His features are regular; the hair is trained over the brow and cropped; but somewhat too short to be quite in the prevailing boyish style. He has all the qualifications of a popular candidate in this woman ruled country, including a touch of wildness.—The importance of his connections gives him a decided advantage over his unhappy cousin.—He is of the best blood in Europe by his mother's side.—London World.

Avoid the very appearance of heat by having your stove stored and kept until winter at St. Mary's, corner of King and Columbus st. Call and see their new revolving Top Cook Stove. my 13

My custom made CLOTHING is warranted of the best imported material, well made, they roughly shunk, and will be sold at prices to suit the times. Call and convince yourself, at S. DEAN'S, 62 King st., corner of Fairfax.
